CADETS MAY HAVE HIGH SCHOOL'S TO GIVE UP TRIP COMMENCEMENT

Mexican Situation May Prevent West Point Seniors from Making Annual Study of the Gettysburg Battlefield.

On account of the much talked of "punitive expedition" into Mexico and the possibility that more serious developments in the situation may occur later, doubt has arisen about the annual visit of the West Point Seniors to the battlefield the first week in May. The Eagle Hotel and Hotel Gettysburg, where the cadets have always been quartered in the past, have advised that it is hoped to come here at the usual time but that it is impossible to close with them definitely now.

In the event of further trouble in Mexico, or any other difficulty which would require a quick mobilization of the army, the date of the Military Academy commencement would be advanced, and the trip to Gettysburg abandoned. It is not believed, however, that either of these contingencies is likely to arise and the general feeling is that the Senior class will come here, this being necessary to avoid allowing the program to become tiresome.

If the visit is made, the cadets will leave West Point on Sunday evening, April 30th, in their own special train.

They will arrive in Gettysburg the following morning and after breakfast will divide into four separate squads, each in charge of one or more officers and instructors who will take them to various places on the field.

The second day, all will go together to the High Water Mark to hear the concluding address.

The Seniors are now making a special study of the conduct of the battle and upon their return home from the Gettysburg trip—if it is this year's present will be of a suitable character.

The Grammar School will have its commencement exercises the same week as the High School.

College President will Make the Address to the Graduating Class. Date is Selected. Other Plans being Considered now.

Thursday, May 25, has been fixed as the date for the annual commencement of the Gettysburg High School and Dr. W. A. Granville, president of the college, has been secured to deliver the oration to the graduates.

The exercises will be held in Walter's Theatre which has been used for this purpose for the past few years. These announcements were made to-day by Miss Helen Cope, acting principal of the schools.

The subjects for the commencement essays and orations are always a matter of general public interest but up to this time none of these has been assigned. The award of the D. A. R. essay prize usually comes before these assignments are made, and that has not yet been announced. As in recent years, some of the essays will not be read at the commencement exercises and the number will be limited, this being necessary to avoid allowing

the program to become tiresome.

There will be the customary prophecy and presentation of gifts, while those who, in the past, have taken such an interest, may be relied upon again this year to produce a beautiful stage setting for the exercises.

Nothing definite has yet been done in the matter of the selection of a gift for the school to be made by the Senior class. This is one of the big topics to occupy the attention of the pupils during the coming weeks.

FIRED BULLET INTO HER HEART

Friend of Many Residents of Fountain Dale and Vicinity, Victim of Fatal Accident at her Home. Killed Instantly.

Residents of Fountain Dale and that section of the county will learn with great regret of the tragic death of Mrs. Emily Bruce, who accidentally shot and killed herself in Norfolk, Virginia, on Tuesday.

Mrs. Bruce, with her father, has been summering for the past several seasons at the Howard cottage, between Fountain Dale and Charman.

She was well known in that vicinity and made many friends by her friendly disposition to all with whom she came in contact.

At the time of the accident Mrs.
Bruce was getting some clothes out of her bureau drawer. A revolver which had been placed in the drawer got fast in the clothes and was knocked against the side. As the result the weapon discharged, the bullet passing through her heart.

She leaves her father, her husband and two children.

HIGHWAY FILMS HERE

Gettysburg again Makes its Appearance in the Movies.

The Lincoln Highway films arrived here this morning from Chambersburg and are being shown at Walter's Theatre this afternoon. The shows this evening will be run according to advertisement. The entire trip across the continent required no less than sixteen reels. This would make a four hour show and would likely become tiresome so that the ten reels to which the most interest attaches were selected for exhibition here.

The trip as shown here starts at New York and the pictures taken at Gettysburg are included. The journey over the Alleghenies comes next, and then sections of Illinois, the Middle West and the Far West compose the balance of the show which requires two hours and a half.

Various local celebrations at the time of the taking of the films come in for prominence in the pictures and the show is interesting, entertaining and educational. Gettysburg gets the films by reason of the fact that S. S. Neely Esq. and several other local persons paid a cash subscription for their taking in this town last summer, and an opportunity is thus given to reimburse the public spirited citizens who put up the funds.
The show from every standpoint deserves liberal patronage.

PURSUED BY U. S. TROOPS

Despatch Says Outlaw is Wounded so Badly Two Had to Support Him on His Horse.

El Paso, Tex., April 6.—The problem of finding and capturing Francisco Villa somewhere within an area of 1600 square miles confronts Brigadier General John J. Pershing and his forces in Mexico.

Information from the "front" says the American troops have been disposed to the best possible advantage; but the task of running down the bandit in an ever widening territory, as the brigand moves southward into the Mexican interior, becomes increasingly difficult. Moore troops are necessary, it is declared.

A Torreon despatch places Villa at Naica, ninety miles southwest of Guerero, where he is said to have killed Nicholas Perez, a former friend. If this is true, the bandit is probably proceeding along the old coach road that leads into Santa Rosalia, whence he could move on to Parral, his reported objective. This despatch said Villa was wounded so badly that two soldiers had to support him on his horse.

A despatch to the war department from General Funston definitely located Colonel Dodd, and presumably the Seventh Cavalry on Monday at Provicia. The despatch also indicated that General Pershing has gone far south, toward the fighting front near Guerrero. A message from General Pershing to General Funston dated April 4 was as follows:

"Met Colonel Dodd Tuesday at Provicia and got details of fight with Villa bandits on March 29. His exceptional march with the Seventh Cavalry to reach Villa's camp and work done by that command deserve high praise."

A wireless from the United States army base at Nampiquipa reported:

"Although by hard marching, American cavalry have overtaken and repulsed two detachments of the Villa column. General Pershing and officers of the expeditionary command realize that much difficult work lies ahead of them. Many of the slopes of the Sierra Tarahumara, where the Americans are searching for trace of Villa, have never been explored except by native Tarahumara Indians."

It is believed here that Villa left his command broken into small groups to occupy the American pursuers while he flees southward toward Parral. A Torreon despatch placed Villa at Naica, ninety miles southwest of Guerero.

With Villa reported near Parral, it has ceased to become a question of using the Mexico Northwestern rail way. The present need is for the Mexican Central road.

Torreon, Mexico, April 6.—A Villa band under Simon Reyes and Chacon, lost forty-two killed in an attempt to surprise the garrison in the mining town of Parras, several miles east of here, Saturday.

The garrison, under Colonel J. M. Gonzales, drove off the bandits and captured a quantity of arms and a number of horses.

A band of Villa supporters wrecked a passenger train on a branch of the Mexican Central railroad near Sombrerete, Thursday, killing a number of persons, according to reports.

FRENCH PUSH
GERMANS BACKCrown Prince's Men Forced Out of Caillette Wood.

STOPPED BELOW DOUAUMONT

Teuton Assaults Above Verdun Are Repulsed With Heavy Losses by French Artillery.

London, April 6.—The French advance on the Verdun front east of the Meuse river has driven the Germans out of their positions in Caillette woods, northeast of Verdun.

The Paris war office, in its official statement, announced that the French have advanced to the German commanding trenches north of these woods.

The French gains in the Verdun sector were secured through powerful counter attacks which followed German assaults against the French positions south of Douaumont village.

Not only were the German attacks unsuccessful, the Teutons losing heavily, but the crown prince's forces were compelled to fall back in the direction of Bals Chauffour, which lie northwest of Douaumont. As a result of the French gains in that region the Germans' hold on Douaumont village is becoming precarious.

The French counter-drive was made after a tremendous bombardment with guns of all calibre, from 3-inch up to 15-inch. The German positions were swept with shells. Fresh troops released from other parts of the front by the extension of the British line into positions formerly held by the French, were used against the Germans.

After the ground had been battered by several hundred tons of projectiles a thin line of riflemen debouched from Chauffour wood. The Germans advanced by short bounds toward the French trenches, situated about 300 yards south of the village. A second and a third line followed at equal distances, with small supporting and attacking columns in the rear. This formation has been noticed during the last few days, and is regarded by the French as proof that the Germans have been sorely punished in their previous assaults in serried ranks.

But the change proved ineffective. The first line of riflemen advanced to within fifty yards of the French trenches and there had to drop to the ground under heavy blasts of shrapnel and sustained musketry. The second and third lines attempted to advance to the support of the first, but were stopped far in the rear by machine gun fire.

The Germans in the first line were in a critical position. Shrapnel work havoc among them. To charge was out of the question and as long as they remained at the point to which they had advanced they were exposed to a decimating fire. The second and third lines were little better off, for they were within range of the French three-inch guns. The entire attacking force finally adopted the only move open, retreating under a raking fire to Chauffour wood. They left half their number on the field. At least three regiments (7000 men) took part in the attack.

Chauffour wood proved to be an insecure shelter, for the French artillery, increasing its range, covered that entire area. It demolished shelters and piled up the German losses.

For the first time in the whole battle the German check was followed by a disorderly flight to cover, say despatches from the front received in Paris.

The action is regarded by military critics as of great significance, showing that the Germans, even with their new formation, are unable to escape the furious response of French artillery; that the French positions though they may be vulnerable at certain and exposed points, cannot be shaken and that the French counter offensive is effective.

STATES CONTROL ALL OUR MILITIA PREPARED TO FEED ARMY IN MEXICO

Constitutional Question Injected ed In Preparedness Bill.

SUPREME COURT TO DECIDE

Governors of the State Have Unquestioned Right to Appoint Officers of National Guard—This Is an Argument Against Building Volunteer Army Out of Militia.

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

Washington, April 6.—[Special]—A great constitutional question being injected into this army measure, no one can tell where it will end. The greatest of all constitutional questions, that which provokes more discussion and disagreement than any other, is where the power of the general government and that of states come in conflict.

There cannot be the slightest question that the constitution gives the states full power over the militia, although the general government may provide for them and use them in case this country is invaded. But the governors of the states have the unquestioned right to appoint all militia officers.

And yet it is proposed to make a national army of the national guard because men in congress do not want to destroy the militia and they know that a volunteer army cannot be built up and maintained except at the expense of the militia.

The Usual Way Out.

It is probable that the usual way out will be found. Congress will pass an unconstitutional law and the supreme court will hold it constitutional. That is called amending the constitution by legislative and judicial interpretation. It has been done before and can be done again. The greenback decisions, the insular decisions and quite a number of others show that the court can usually be depended upon to follow the trend of public opinion and wishes of the people in construing the constitution.

Explained by Adamson.

Congressman Bennet of New York had just expressed his regret over the disposition of congress to strike down the rights of the states contrary to the constitution, which brought Adamson of Georgia out with the following:

"I am deeply distressed at the heartfelt lamentation of the modern weeping prophet, Mr. Bennet, that there is no defender of the constitution and state rights in congress. I have observed that while many of us have respect for the constitution and state rights from principle and deem it necessary to make constant protestations there is no danger of this instrument or the doctrine being abandoned. Every once in awhile we see that when the shoe pinches some gentleman who had forgotten about the constitution and state rights begins to shout vigorously for both because he is in a corner, and interests prompt him to invoke the constitution and state rights."

An Irresistible Appeal.

Senator Ashurst had been hampered by constant speech making during the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and one morning he started the proceedings, saying:

"I appeal to senators to make just as few and as short speeches as their oratorical temperaments will permit. I appeal to senators to sit and vote and exercise their oratorical capacities on the military bill."

That day he got his bill through.

Governors Get a Chance.

Discussion of the militia provisions of the army bill gives the former governors a chance to air their views. The governors were commanders of the militia; to that extent they have been military men. They have had interviews with the adjutant generals of their states and wearing high silk hats have sat upon horses and reviewed the state troops. Why the high silk hat and frock coat should be the uniform of the commander in chief of the militia is something that has never been explained, but it is firmly fixed here.

But what I was going to say is that every governor has been a commander of troops and what he doesn't know about state soldiers is not worth knowing. There are a number of governors in the senate and they have been overflowing with information.

What Happened in Caucus.

Dick Morgan of Oklahoma was talking about rural credits legislation, asserting that the Democrats did not seem anxious to do anything.

"Don't you know that the Democrats in caucus the other night decided to put through a rural credits bill?" asked Howard of Georgia.

"How could he know what happened in a Democratic caucus?" asked Platt of New York.

"Oh, I mean the press report," replied Howard. "Of course no one would divulge the secrets of that caucus."

Praises General Wood.

"General Wood," remarked Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, discussing the army bill, "is one of the strongest and brainiest men in the army."

He then went on to quote General Wood in support of vocational education, something which the senator has been favoring for a long time.

Worth Knowing.

To remove rust from steel rub the rusted part well with sweet oil and allow it to stand for 48 hours. Then rub with a piece of soft leather and sprinkle with finely powdered unslaked lime until the rust disappears.

Daily Thought.

The mind that is cheerful in its present state will be adverse to all solicitudes to the future, and will meet the bitter occurrences of life with a placid smile.—Horace.

CHAPTER X.

Sheridan had decided to conclude his day's work early that afternoon, and at about two o'clock he left his office with a man of affairs from foreign parts, who had traveled far for a business conference with Sheridan and his colleagues. Herr Favre, in spite of his French name, was a gentleman of Bavaria. It was his first visit to our country, and Sheridan took pleasure in showing him the sights of the country's finest city.

They arrived at the Pump Works, and for an hour Herr Favre was personally conducted and personally instructed by the founder and president, the buzzing queen bee of those buzzing vines.

"Now I'll take you for a spin in the country," said Sheridan, when at last they came out to the car again. "We'll take a breeze." But, with his foot on the step he paused to hail a neat young man who came out of the office smiling a greeting. "Hello, young fellow," Sheridan said heartily. "On the job, are you, Jimmie? Ha! They don't catch you off of it very often, I guess, though I do hear you go automobile ridin' in the country sometimes with a mighty fine-lookin' girl settin' up beside you!" He roared with laughter, clapping his son upon the shoulder. "That's all right with me—if it is with her, So, Jimmie? Well, when we goin' to move into your new warehouses? Monday?"

"Sunday, if you want to," said Jim. "No!" cried his father, delighted. "Don't tell me you're goin' to keep your word about dates! That's no way to do contrac'tin'! Never heard of a contractor yet didn't want more time."

"They'll be all ready for you on the minute," said Jim. "I'm going over both of 'em now, with Links and Sherman, from foundation to roof. I guess they'll pass inspection, too!"

"Well, then, when you get through with that," said his father, "you go and take your girl out ridin'. By George! you've earned it! You tell her you stand high with me!" He stepped into the car, waving a waggish farewell, and, when the wheels were in motion again, he turned upon his companion a broad face literally shining with pride. "That's my boy Jimmie!" he said.

"Fine young man, yes," said Herr Favre.

"I got two o' the finest boys," said Sheridan, "I got two o' the finest boys God ever made, and that's a fact, Mr. Favre! Jim's the oldest, and I tell you they got to get up the day before if they expect to catch him in bed! My other boy, Roscoe, he's always to the good, too, but Jim's a wizard. You saw them two new-process warehouses, just about finished? Well, Jim built 'em. I'll tell you about that, Mr. Favre." And he recited this history, describing the new process at length; in fact, he had such pride in Jim's achievement that he told Herr Favre all about it more than once.

"Fine young man, yes," repeated the good Muenchener, three-quarters of an hour later. They were many miles out in the open country by this time.

"He is that!" said Sheridan, adding, as if confidentially: "I got a fine family, Mr. Favre—fine children. I got a daughter now; you take her and put her anywhere you please, and she'll shine up with any of 'em. There's culture and refinement and society in this town by the carload, and here lately she's been gettin' right in the thick of it—her and my daughter-in-law, both. I got a mighty fine daughter-in-law, Mr. Favre. I'm goin' to get you up for a meal with us before you leave town, and you'll see, and, well, sir, from all I hear the two of 'em been holdin' their own with the best. Myself, I and the wife, never had time for much o' that kind o' doin's, but it's all right and good for the children; and my daughter she's always kind of taken to it. I'll read you a poem she wrote when I get you up at the house. She wrote it in school."

"Now Good Night, Mr. Favre."

only when something of real importance happened.

"Extry! All about the hor'ble axn't! Extry!" a boy squawked under his nose, as he descended from the car.

"Go on away!" said Sheridan gruffly, though he smiled. He liked to see the youngsters working so noisily to get on the world.

But as he crossed the pavement to the brilliant glass doors of the barber shop, a second newsboy grasped the arm of the one who had thus cried his wares.

"Say, Yallern," said this second newsboy with awe, "n't chew know who that is?"

"Who?"

"IT'S SHERIDAN: 'Jeest!'" cried the first, staring insanely.

At about the same hour, four times a week—Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday—Sheridan stopped at this shop to be shaved by the head barber. The barbers were negroes, he was their great man, and it was their habit to give him a "reception," his entrance being always the signal for a flurry of jocular hospitality, followed by general excesses of briskness and gayety. But it was not so this evening.

The shop was crowded. Copies of the "extra" were being read by men waiting and by men in the latter stages of treatment. "Extras" lay upon vacant seats and showed from the pockets of hanging coats.

There was a loud chatter between the practitioners and their recumbent patients, a vocal charivari which stopped abruptly as Sheridan opened the door. His name seemed to fizz in the air like the last sputtering of a firework; the barbers stopped shaving and clipping; lathered men turned their prostrate heads to stare, and there was a moment of amazing silence in the shop.

The head barber, nearest the door, stood like a barber in a tableau. His left hand held stretched between thumb and forefinger an elastic section of his helpless customer's cheek, while his right hand hung poised above it, the razor motionless. And then, roused from trance by the door's closing, he accepted the fact of Sheridan's presence. The barber remembered that there are no circumstances in life—or just after it—under which a man does not need to be shaved.

He stepped forward, profoundly grave. "I be through with this man in the chair one minute, Mist' Sheridan," he said, in a hushed voice. "Yes, sub."

And of a solemn negro youth who stood by, gazing stupidly. "You goin' resign?" he demanded in a fierce undertone. "You goin' take Mist' Sheridan's coat?" He sent an angry look round the shop, and the barbers, taking his meaning, averted their eyes and fell to work, the murmur of subdued conversation buzzing from chair to chair.

"You sit down one minute, Mist' Sheridan," said the head barber gently. "I fix nice chair fo' you to wait in."

"Never mind," said Sheridan. "Go on get through with your man."

"Yessuh." And he went quickly back to his chair on tiptoe, followed by Sheridan's puzzled gaze.

Something had gone wrong in the shop, evidently. Sheridan did not know what to make of it. Ordinarily he would have shouted a hilarious demand for the meaning of the mystery, but an inexplicable silence had been imposed upon him by the hush that fell upon his entrance and by the odd look every man in the shop had bent upon him.

Vaguely disquieted, he walked to one of the seats in the rear of the shop and looked down the two lines of barbers, catching quickly shifted, furtive glances here and there. He made this brief survey after wondering if one of the barbers had died suddenly, that day, or the night before; but there was no vacancy in either line.

The seat next to his was unoccupied, but someone had left a copy of the "extra" there, and, frowning, he picked it up and glanced at it. The first of the swollen display lines had little meaning to him:

"Extry! Extry!" screamed the newsboys, zigzagging among the crowds like bats in the dusk. "Extry! All about the horrible accident! Extry!"

It struck Sheridan that the papers sent out too many "extras;" they printed "extras" for all sorts of petty crimes and casualties. It was a mistake, he decided, critically. Crying "Wolf" too often wouldn't sell the goods; it was bad business. The papers would "make more in the long run," he was little meaning to him:

Fatally faulty. New process roof collapses hurling capitalist to death with inventor. Seven escape when crash comes down.

Thus far had he read when a thin hand fell upon the paper, covering the print from his eyes, and, looking up, he saw Bibbs standing before him, pale and gentle, immeasurably compassionate.

"I've come for you, father," said Bibbs, "Here's the boy with your coat and hat. Put them on and come home."

And even then Sheridan did not understand. So secure was he in the strength and bigness of everything that was his, he did not know what calamity had befallen him. But he was frightened.

Without a word, he followed Bibbs heavily out through the still shop, but as they reached the pavement he stopped short and, grasping his son's sleeve with shaking fingers, swung him round so that they stood face to face.

"What—what?" His mouth could not do him the service he asked of it, was so frightened.

"Extry!" screamed a newsboy straight in his face. "Young North side millionaire insultingly killed! Extry!"

"Not—Jim!" said Sheridan.

Bibbs caught his father's hand in his own.

"And you come to tell me that?"

Sheridan did not know what he said. But in those first words and in the first anguish of the big, stricken face Bibbs understood the unuttered cry of accusation:

"Why wasn't it you?"

It was midwinter in what was then St. Petersburg, now Petrograd. A party of ladies and gentlemen were skating on the Neva. A lady was standing somewhat apart from the others looking at the skaters. Noticing two gentlemen go by her in company she turned to a lady standing near and asked who they were. She was informed that one of them was a grand duke, the other Count Demidoff. At the mention of the latter name the inquirer started. Her informant noticed it and asked the cause, whereupon the other said something which interested the hearer greatly.

"I am Mme. Garotsky," the latter said. "I know the count very well. If you will permit I will arrange a meeting between you and him."

The next day Count Demidoff received an invitation to dinner with Mme. Garotsky to meet a friend of hers from one of the provinces. He accepted the invitation, and the moment he laid eyes on a guest to whom he was introduced as Mme. Petroff he was struck with her beauty. Not only that; he was delighted with her intelligence. After the dinner Mme. Garotsky pleaded an indisposition and, retiring to her room, left her two guests to gether.

The count passed a delightful evening. Before taking his departure he had confessed that he was a married man, but was not living with his wife. Indeed, he had been married by proxy and had never seen his wife. He belonged to a very old family, his title dating back many centuries, and would have had the entree to the court circle had he the means to associate with persons who spent money like water. He had advertised for some rich commoner who would marry him and turn over to him a portion of her estate in lieu of being permitted to assume his rank. It was to be a mere commercial transaction, the two separating as soon as the marriage ceremony had been performed. His advertisement met the eye of a young widow who had inherited a large fortune from her husband, a very rich manufacturer much older than herself, who had died soon after their marriage. She offered a large slice of her estate for the privilege of being a countess, and since neither expressed a wish to see the other and the widow lived in a remote province, they were married by proxy.

Mme. Petroff listened to this story and the count fancied that he saw a sigh, which he attributed to the fact that he was a married man. Indeed he had been captivated by the lady and was saddened at the thought that a marriage between him and her was impossible. However, when they parted he took her address in the city and the very next day called upon her.

Mme. Petroff remained in Petrograd some time and gave the count every encouragement to be with her. They drove together, skated together, and Demidoff secured invitations for her. One day he told her that he loved her and would be only too glad to marry her were it not for the insurmountable objection that kept them apart.

Notwithstanding the fact of that objection, when Mme. Petroff returned to her home she invited Count Demidoff to visit her there. He scarcely understood this, for she had given him evidence of being a good woman, and it she could be anything more than a friend to him it could only be a wife and to be his wife was impossible. He was loath to go, feeling that since he could not possess her he was only sinking deeper in misery. He had sounded her on the matter of a possible return of the fortune he had received from his wife and a divorce. But she had declared that on no account would she marry a divorced man.

When the count entered the place wherein Mme. Petroff lived he was as astonished at its magnificence. On entering the house he found every luxury. His hostess introduced him to her mother, who lived with her, thus making his visit perfectly proper.

Count Demidoff's stay in the home of Mme. Petroff was like a visit to fairyland. Every day the hostess contrived new methods of passing the time agreeably. One thing surprised the count: there were no other guests except himself. Moreover, all the servants seemed to be acting as if they had been trained to a part. When they said "Yes, madame," sometimes they got it "Yes, Mme. Petroff," and at all times they appeared to be saying what the simple creatures were not used to saying. One evening a lackey who was sent to summon the count for dinner said:

"The countess awaits your excellency."

"The countess?" exclaimed Demidoff. "I mean Mme. Petroff," said the poor fellow, covered with confusion.

"There is something concealed here," said the count half aloud to himself and went down to his hostess.

"Countess," he said, "may I take you to dinner?"

"What?" exclaimed the hostess. "You have got my secret?"

"I have," replied the count, making a gigantic bluff.

"And you know that I am your wife, the Countess Demidoff?"

It was the count's turn to be astonished.

"You my wife—you, the provincial with whom I exchanged my title for a portion of your fortune?"

"Then you did not know?"

"But I know now," And, springing forward, he caught her in his arms.

Could Find Something.
"I should think you would find it hard to know what to give her for her birthday. She has everything, you know." "Yes, I know; still, there are always some new useless things coming up."—Puck.

If you have tried "Internal" medicines without success, we want you to try the "External" treatment—Vick's "Vap-O-Rub" Salve. Apply hot wet towels over the throat and chest to open the pores, then rub Vick's in well and cover with a warm flannel cloth. The body warmth releases healing vapors that are inhaled with each breath, and, in addition, Vick's is absorbed through the pores. 25c, 50c, or $1.00.
